

STUDENTS

The English Language Program offers a broad and diverse curriculum and is suitable for upper secondary school graduates as well as professionals from other fields who are seeking a career change. Proficiency in the English language is essential for academic success, for studying abroad, for accessing scientific resources, and for employment across virtually all industries.

The program includes a wide range of courses in English Language and Literature, as well as interdisciplinary courses. Interdisciplinary subjects foster critical thinking and help students connect concepts across different disciplines, encouraging them to address complex problems that cannot be adequately examined within the boundaries of a single field. These courses open pathways for collaborative projects and support the development of teamwork and communication skills, enabling students to effectively convey their ideas across disciplinary contexts.

As a result, graduates of the English Language Program have diverse career opportunities in fields such as translation, interpreting, journalism, tourism, teaching, media, international relations, business interpreting, editing, and creative writing. Graduates may also pursue careers in non-governmental organizations, publishing houses, and international organizations such as the European Union, as well as work in various embassies in Kosovo.

The study program aims to attract approximately 100 new students each year.
